

Going to the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV)

A Social Story

Today, I am getting a new license. I have to go to the Department of Motor Vehicles.

Some people call it the DMV for short.

The DMV often has very long lines, and I get frustrated because I have to wait for so long.

Standing in line is boring and makes me anxious, but I know that eventually it will be my turn.

When it is my turn, I will walk up to the counter and politely tell the person behind the desk that I need to renew my license. When I tell people what I need, they will be able to better help me get what I want or need.

I might have to wait a little longer for my picture to be taken, but I will be patient and wait for my name or number to be called.

I will remember to stay in line, be patient, and wait my turn. If I do not, I will have to wait even longer.

I will smile when my picture is taken. I want the picture on my license to show that I am happy and approachable.

When I am done, I will not stay in the building.
This might make people uncomfortable. I will go home, and my new license will come in the mail in a few weeks.
