

Mailing a Package

A Social Story

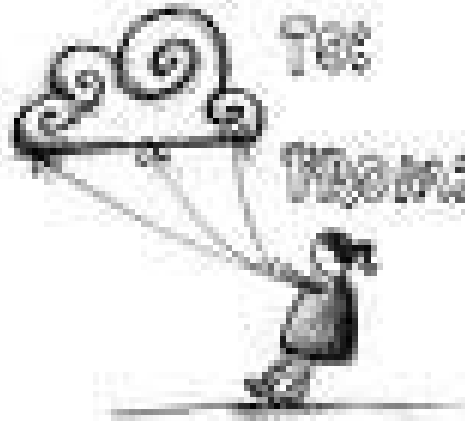

Today I am going to the post office to mail a package. I feel overwhelmed because there are a lot of options.

I can avoid this by using a old box at home, and packaging it myself. This way, I only have to go to the post office to have it shipped.

I will also spend less time at the post office if I correctly write an address and return address on the package.

I will make sure I mail the package early. If I mail it early, it will get to its destination on time. This will make the person I am sending it to happy.

I will wait patiently in line until it is my turn. I will be quiet and keep to myself. If I start talking a lot to people who do not know me, they might get uncomfortable.

When it is my turn, I will wait for the postal worker to weigh my package and tell me how much it will cost to ship it. I will not get mad if it costs more than I expected, and I will not argue. This is rude, and being rude makes people not like me.

Package Tracking

After I pay for my package, I will thank the postal worker. I can also ask for a tracking number so I will know when the package is delivered. This is responsible, and being a responsible person is good.
